We will now ask you to make 8 successive choices, each of these choices is between a fixed number of YouGov points and an all-or-nothing lottery. The lottery will work as follows. The computer will roll a six-sided die. The general rule is that you will earn nothing if the die indicates 1, 2 or 3; and earn something (as indicated for each case) if the die indicates 4, 5 or 6. The amount of points you can earn in the lottery will vary in each of the eight cases we will describe. Finally at the end of your 8 choices you will see how many YouGov points you earned for each of the 8 decisions you made.

You will be asked to indicate your preferred option in each of the cases.

We are going to describe some tax payers: one tax payer is a single person; another is a married couple filing a joint return. These tax payers will have different income levels; they will also have different numbers of children who are dependent on them; and they will also differ in terms of their marital status.

We will now like you to play another game. This game is pretty difficult so don't get discouraged - just give it your best effort. You will receive 50 points if you pick any one of the correct answers. All of the questions are going to use a Left versus Right political scale. The most Left-wing position is Position 0. The most Right-wing position is Position 10. The Centrist position is Position 5. We are going to locate political parties on this scale - Party A, Party B, etc. And, we are going to report the number of Parliamentary seats each party won in a recent election.
